ROTTEN ROADS—

Considering the fact that a large part of the Campbell Press readers live in the fifth supervisorial district, and that the condition of the roads in that district which lead into the Campbell area vitally affect the town itself, this week we are calling your attention to the state of disrepair into which San Tomas, Rincon avenue, McCoy avenue and Pollard road have been allowed to fall. A motor ride over these roads will convince even the most hardened tourist that all is not as it should be. You may start out on your ride with a new car—and end up with one which has acquired at least a few rattles. These roads have for years been a thorn in the sides of the people who are obliged to drive over them whenever they want to go anywhere. For years the taxpayers whose property borders the "washboards" have been trying to get them paved. They have met with nothing but discouragement—promises and disappointments. The time has come for all good fifth district folks to come to the aid of their long-suffering automobiles. In other words, there is at hand an opportunity to displace the incumbent supervisor and secure one who bears the reputation of being fair to all; one who would not concentrate his road program on the distant parts of his district.

NO ACTION—

It is useless to bear longer with the present supervisor. For ten years he has been promising to do something about the previously mentioned lanes of travel and not one of them has come to definite action. Several weeks ago a representative group of Campbell people went to the bat for the folks in this end of the fifth district. They want good roads to the west of them as much as do the people who live along the roads themselves. This group addressed a communication to the incumbent supervisor of the fifth district. It follows in its entirety:

July 28, 1930

Mr. C. P. Cooley, Supervisor,
San Jose, Calif.
Dear Mr. Cooley:

The undersigned organizations and individuals situated in and adjacent to the fifth district, being interested in the improvement of certain roads therein, and being given to understand that you have tentatively agreed to make certain improvements, would like to have a definite statement from you, in writing, as to your intentions with reference to the following:

Rincon avenue from the end of the fourth district to San Tomas, San Tomas to McCoy and McCoy to Quito. It is our understanding that these roads are to be oiled and graveled.

San Tomas from the Santa Clara-Los Gatos road to Burrows road to Pollard and Pol-

FUNERAL FOR MRS. SARAH A. RANEY HELD MONDAY

Funeral services were held Monday afternoon from the Santa Clara Undertaking parlors for Mrs. Sarah Ann Raney, who passed away Sunday, Aug. 16, at her home near Campbell. She was the wife of the late J. M. Raney, a native of California and a resident near Campbell for many years. She was 79 years of age.

Surviving are a son, three daughters, one of whom is Mrs. Gladys Brooks of Campbell, two sisters and a brother.

Interment was made in the Santa Clara cemetery.

lard to Quito. We desire the cost of improvements of these roads placed on the budget to come out of the gasoline tax.

It is of vital interest to all concerned that we know at an early date just what your position is concerning the above and definite written information would be appreciated.

The letter was signed by the master of the Orchard City Grange, president of the Vine-land Improvement club, president Pundita Circle, clerk, trustees Campbell Union Grammar school, clerk, trustees Campbell Union High school, president Rinconada Golf club, president Country Woman's club, president Campbell Chamber of Commerce and the president of the Campbell Kiwanis club.

Monday a committee selected from the organizations signatory to the letter, including S. N. Hedegard, chairman, Dr. W. I. Merrill, Ralph H. Hyde, J. C. Birnbaum, Leroy Davison, George Barrows and A. L. Shaw waited upon Mr. Cooley for his answer. Messrs Hedegard and Merrill improved the opportunity to add a few words relative to the urgent need of road repair in the near fifth district—and this time even the customary promise failed to be forthcoming. The delegation was permitted to return to their homes in what Mr. Cooley probably believed to be a state of resignation.

STILL DETERMINED—

Such, however, was not the case. These organizations, many of whose members are residents of the fifth district, are more than ever determined to secure equality of road improvements. Mr. Cooley has been on the job for ten years, and the only paved roads in the Campbell community part of his district, Los Gatos-Saratoga highway, Saratoga-Mt. View highway, Mt. View avenue to Meridian Corners, San Antonio road and Quito road, were achieved by his sterling predecessor, F. E. Mitchell of Quito road. There is in the running for supervisor of the fifth district another

Hon. Arthur Free

CAMPBELL SCHOOLS OPEN SEPTEMBER 15

According to D. H. Cramer, principal of the Campbell Union High school, and I. R. Abbott, superintendent of the Campbell Union Grammar school, both schools will open this year Monday, Sept. 15.

Registration in the grammar school occurs on the opening date while registration in the high school may be made Friday, Sept. 12.

With few exceptions the same staff of teachers will be back this fall. Miss Kittie Johnson, who last year was on leave of absence, is back. Enrollment is expected to be considerably greater in both schools than it was last year.

such man—C. C. Spalding of Sunnyvale. Mr. Spalding is making no wild pre-election promises, but he has been over the roads in question and has observed and admitted the need for improvement. Fifth district voters will do well to give Mr. Spalding their support at the primary Aug. 26. Turn to page five and you will read other reasons why he is admirably fitted to hold the office—agriculturist, banker and statesman. C. C. Spalding—check and double check!

That's all.

Hon. Arthur M. Free will be the honor guest and speaker at two assemblies in Campbell next Tuesday evening while the votes are being counted to return him to Congress. Mr. and Mrs. Free will be guests at the Kiwanis club ladies' night dinner and Mr. Free will give a talk on the recent tariff law. He was most active during the last session of congress in securing for California products a place in the sun on the tariff bill and is probably one of the best informed men on the coast in regard to the new law and its benefits to his state.

Following his talk at the dinner he will address the members of the Orchard City Grange.

Mr. Free is one real go-getter when he enters a fight and his fighting ability was never better displayed than when in the battle for the dirigible air base which has practically been won by his persistence.

The eighth district is now rejoicing in his accomplishments and will undoubtedly return him to congress by a large majority.

SUMMER ORCHESTRA CLASS IS WELL ATTENDED

A. A. Thielke, director and leader of the high school orchestra, has for the past three months, maintained a class for students wishing to begin orchestral work or to better themselves with a view to making the first orchestra this fall.

Mr. Thielke says he will have a 42-piece orchestra this year in the first division, and all of them are promising musicians. The young people have been very faithful in their summer class attendance, the result of which will probably be seen in the first orchestra concert of the year.

Rev. George Marsh, who occupied the pulpit of the Congregational church Sunday, was the guest of Mrs. Ellen R. Smith over the week-end, remaining over today to speak at the Kiwanis luncheon.

CAMPBELL WILL NOT GET A NEW DEPOT, REPORT

The Campbell Chamber of Commerce, in their efforts to secure a new depot for Campbell, met last week with E. R. Anthony, division superintendent of the Southern Pacific, who came to Campbell Friday evening.

Mr. Anthony was not at all in favor of spending any money for railroad improvements in Campbell, stating that the patronage of the railroad did not warrant the expenditure. He remarked on the competition of the bus and truck-freight lines.

Chamber of Commerce committeemen felt that improved facilities would serve to increase railroad business here, but Mr. Anthony told them, bluntly, that there would have to be some guarantee of that before the company could see its way clear to spend the money necessary to make the required improvements here.

ANOTHER STREET DANCE TO BE HELD THURSDAY NIGHT

An ad on page four will inform you of a street dance to be held on Campbell avenue between Central and First street Thursday evening, Aug. 21. The dance is free and is sponsored by a group of local business men headed by the genial proprietor of the Rainbow soda fountain, A. J. Robins. They want everybody to be there.

Handkerchief Shower For Miss Joyce Robson Last Week

Miss Joyce Robson, whose marriage to George R. Stray is to be consummated Sept. 9 in the Stanford memorial chapel, was the recipient of a handkerchief shower last week when the Mesdames E. G. Ainsley and W. N. Lloyd entertained a group of friends at the former's home on North Second street.

The earlier hours of the afternoon were passed with bridge at which the guest of honor attained the highest score. Following the games a table tray, with cover of lace over pink, laden with dainty parcels, was placed before the bride-elect, and a happy half hour was spent in their examination.

Later a dainty luncheon was served at small tables, centered with baskets holding small French bouquets in pastel shades. Large bowls of flowers in shades of pink and blue lent charm to the rooms.

COURT DECISION CLEARS NAME OF RALSTON ALISON

The many Campbell friends of the Alison family, who for many years contributed to all that was good in the town, will be glad to hear of the recent court decision which clears from the name of Ralston Alison the stigma of suicide.

On September 21, 1926, Mr. Alison was found dead beside his automobile on the Dry Creek road. Visible evidence pointed strongly to murder.

His affairs were in excellent shape. He was intensely happy in his family relationships, being devoted to his wife and daughters, Lucile and Helen. He had every reason to want to live.

Mr. Alison had two insurance policies containing double indemnity clauses for death by violence. The insurance companies denied liability under these clauses, claiming that no murder had been done.

Attorney J. L. McNab of San Francisco brought suit for Mrs. Alison against the insurance companies. His recent victory in the courts removes all doubt from the minds of the law that Mr. Alison did not take his own life.

The Campbell Press publishes this vindication of the good name of one of Campbell's most loved and well remembered citizens.

MAYOR ROLPH OF SAN FRANCISCO SPOKE HERE T'DAY

Yesterday, shortly after 12 o'clock noon, James Rolph, Jr., mayor of San Francisco and candidate for nomination to the office of governor of California, addressed a gathering near the "big tree" in front of the J. C. Ainsley cannery. Mr. Rolph spoke of the employment situation or, as he called it, the un-employment situation in California. He said that if elected he would remedy this regrettable condition.

Mayor Rolph's party, which included several ears of supporters, was escorted over the county by a group of state traffic officer.

Mrs. Emily Pannell Gard and daughter, Miss Lillian Gard, are enjoying a week's vacation at Capitola where they are occupying the Dr. L. M. Rose cottage.

Mr. and Mrs. Merlin Bohnett left Saturday for Lake Tahoe for a two-weeks' outing.

The summer division of the Congregational guild meets next Thursday, Aug. 28, with Mrs. George Wright on Leigh avenue.

There is one man in every State that can serve all of its people best . . .

JAMES ROLPH, JR., is a true representative of the spirit of California.

James Rolph, Jr., has reflected the highest credit upon the community of which he has been the Mayor for nearly twenty years.

James Rolph, Jr., is exceptionally well equipped to foster and expand the affection that the people of all the States entertain for California.

James Rolph, Jr., interprets correctly and accurately the ideals and impulses of the people of California.

James Rolph, Jr., better than any other man, can break down what remains of the sectional prejudices in California, which he has constantly striven to abate.

James Rolph, Jr., is California born and raised, and in the twenty years of his public service he has built up a record of achievement that qualifies him as the one man that can best serve all the people of California.

Success in Saving Money Depends on Action

Everybody knows the wisdom and the value of saving money and nearly everybody means to save some time. The trouble with the most of us is that we promise ourselves that we will save in the future. We intend to save a part of our income. We have good intentions but put off action until we have spent our money for other things. But mere wishing and hoping are not enough. We must act.

The all important thing is to begin. Start a savings account today in one of the 95 conveniently located offices of the American Trust Company.

As to the County Recorder

(EDITORIAL)

In the primary election coming there are many candidates for county offices. For the office of county recorder, Mrs. May E. Flannery, successor to a position honorably held by her husband, the late "Dan" Flannery, has three opponents.

The directors and stockholders of a private business select their business managers and executives with care; these are trained and educated to handle that particular business. Mrs. Flannery has served the county three years most diligently, in an economical, efficient and courteous manner.

Mrs. Flannery has shown executive ability in the manner in which she has conducted the office of county recorder, and has proved her business acumen by the economical measures adopted which have resulted in direct savings to the taxpayers of $1247.38 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1929. So we, the directors and stockholders of Santa Clara county, should think twice before voting on August 26, 1930, and should vote to keep an efficient executive in office.

Would you remove an executive in your private business who has shown marked ability and is experienced, and replace him, or her, with some one who has had no experience in that particular line of business, just because some new applicant for the job happened along? Would you? The answer is, No!

Then why not elect May E. Flannery county recorder to succeed herself?—Adv.

MATCHING GROWS IN POPULARITY

DESIGNERS of the midseason and early autumn styles continue to favor the idea of fashioning the hat of the same material as the dress. Nor are their efforts confined in one direction, for the subject is approached from many angles. That is, the theory is being successfully put to practice not only with tweeds and other woollens, but with the sheerest of weaves as well.

The illustration displays a green chiffon dress with tiered skirt and coat to match. The hat, which is nothing more or less than a scarf draped on a lightweight molded-to-the-head foundation, is of the same chiffon as the dress. The green motif is further carried out in the shoes and the bag which are of green printed crepe.

Out of this vogue for matching things a most charming fashion is developing for fall in which the cunning little colorful bi-length wraps are topped with berets made of the same bright velveteen or silk as the quaint coat. These jaunty sets are strikingly new. They are charming with light frocks, especially with sheer prints. The effect is heightened in that the color of the velveteen of the beret and the short wrap corresponds to a leading tone in the dress print.

Quacking A Story for the Children

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE ducks had just said they had noticed the pelican children, but had not said they thought they were handsome.

"They'll soon be able to fly as well as we can," said Mrs. Pelican with pride.

"We are having lessons every day," said Mr. Pelican. "They are too old for the nest now."

"What good times we did have then," said Mrs. Pelican. "It was such fun to find fish and take them home delicious bits—feeding them right in the nest."

"You mean right in the beaks and thence to their good pouches," said Mr. Pelican.

"Well," said Mrs. Pelican. "I mean to say that I was in the nest and they were in the nest when I fed them."

"Of course, the food didn't stay in the nest."

"It did in a way," said Mr. Pelican.

"Oh dear, oh dear," said Mrs. Pelican. "The little ones weren't going out, and the food went into them."

"They were in the nest."

hats of the identical fabric as that which styles the suit. Particular attention will be paid to related color schemes which extend to the minutest detail. It follows that all accessories will require meticulous selection.

The fall style program also offers the delightful prospect of dazzling evening sets which consist of little novelty boleros and various quaint short wraps allover embroidered with glittering sequins, accompanied with matching berets.

At the immediate moment, three-quarter length coats of transparent velvet are modishly topped with toques or berets of the same velvet for daytime wear. For these afternoon ensembles of wrap and hat, fancy turns to colors as well as black.

ican. "Will I ever learn to speak correctly?"

"Mr. Pelican is such a very particular creature about his speech and about my speech."

"So it seems," said the ducks. "Well, quacking is good enough for us, and we don't just care what we say when we quack."

"It's as easy to be right as wrong," said Mr. Pelican in a haughty tone, and he smiled kindly at Mrs. Pelican.

"You'll yet learn, my love," said Mrs. Pelican.

"Ah, thank you," said Mrs. Pelican, sweetly.

"I suppose," said Mrs. White Duck, "that it is extremely useful to have those pouches that hang down under your beaks."

"Indeed it is extremely useful," said Mrs. Pelican. "We can eat so much more in that way."

"Yes, ever so much more."

"Of course that is a great advantage," Mr. Pelican added, in a tone as though he was telling the ducks that he owned the best part of the world.

"When they can fly they will forget they have web feet, for even though their legs are short, as ours are," said Mrs. Pelican, "their wings will be strong."

"Every one knows how the pelicans can fly."

While Mrs. White Duck and Mrs. Tan and White Duck are listening they were feeling unhappy.

They could not fly nearly so well as the pelicans could, and their feet were just as bad.

The pelicans noticed that they had made the ducks very quiet, and at once they knew that what they had said about feet was what made the ducks feel unhappy.

"We are having a fish dinner," said Mrs. Pelican, in a society voice which she thought was very superior and smart, "and we would be honored if you would join us."

"It is to be given on the bank by the pond and we'll enjoy having fine guests like the ducks."

That made the ducks feel quite happy again and they quacked delightedly.

"I would like to bring some delicious insects along with me," said Mrs. Duck.

"I have some wonderful bugs—fresh today," said Mrs. Tan and White Duck. "Can't we join our dinners together and all have a party?"

"It will be every one's party. Every one will be able to enjoy it."

"Fine scheme," said Mrs. Pelican.

"I approve of it," said Mr. Pelican. "as I do a great deal of the marketing, and I like to see folks and creatures share things and be friendly."

So they all had a fine party and such a quack-quacking as could be heard!

The Opal Ring for Grace

The Weekly Short Story—By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

WHEN Sammy left his home town in America to go far across the sea to the exhibition at Wembley, he certainly had not expected to be in the famous Scotland Yard.

However, Sammy was merely in the Lost and Found office of that institution in quest of his raincoat. He had left it on the bus after a day at Wembley.

He had not supposed so many careless people existed in the whole world and took up his place patiently on the fringe of the crowd waiting there at the various windows to claim lost property.

At least, the procedure of claiming lost raincoats would have seemed tedious to Sammy had he not caught sight of her. She was standing just behind him and seemingly a too fragile part of the pushing crowd. Sammy edged aside and managed to place himself as a kind of buffer. She had looked up at him and smiled her thanks, but it had been a lengthy and satisfactory thanks that went most completely to Sammy's head.

And during that time while others were drawing nearer the officers in charge of the windows, Sammy had plenty of time to note all the lovely things in connection with her. In the first place, he felt reasonably sure that she was an American

There was that frank interest in everything lighting her eyes. In her hand she carried the letter that Scotland Yard had sent her telling her that her opal bracelet had been found.

Finally Sammy saw her draw forth some banknotes to pay the charge of three shillings on the pound on the value of her bracelet and watched her sign the papers that the officer placed before her. Sammy glowered at that officer simply because he was fortunate enough to take in at one glance the name and address she was writing.

After that, she turned, looked into Sammy's eyes again with a swift sweet farewell and edged her way out of the crowd. Sammy was also quick enough to see that she had forgotten her umbrella and brilliant enough to take it swiftly from the counter as it were his own. It was still warm from the grasp of her hand.

It was his turn now at the window, and he told the tale of his loss—a brown raincoat left on a bus, and all the time he was wondering if he could possibly catch up with her or whether the vast London streets would have swallowed her up. Anyway, he had her address. Sammy could afford to wait. He most certainly would return the umbrella in person rather than permit her to stand in that crowd again in Scotland Yard office and get it back through its proper channel. In this particular case Sammy felt himself and not Scotland Yard to be the proper channel.

But when he went out to the address, 15 Norfolk square, next day, to return that umbrella, the fates had played him false.

"Miss Weller left yesterday," he was informed, "she went to Scotland to sail this morning for America. Yes, she left an address, as she said she had lost an umbrella." Sammy failed to hear anything for a moment so black had the day grown, but he rallied and knew that some way he would manage to see that she got her umbrella.

In Sammy's pocket on his way home was a most lovely opal ring—Sammy had great hopes.

And out in her garden, when late September was hurrying all sorts of wonderful tawny colors about the landscape, Grace Weller sighed into the huge bunch of chrysanthemums she had cut.

"Plans can go very much askew," she informed the flowers, but of course they didn't know anything about a fine looking young man who had stood beside Grace in the office of Scotland Yard and looked protectingly into her eyes.

"A gentleman to see you, miss," came swiftly from old Nanny's part of the house. "Shall I just show him out there—he says it's about an umbrella."

Grace blushed and hid her face quickly from Nanny.

When their hands finally did meet it seemed as if they never could draw them apart.

"I brought your umbrella," said Sammy.

"Oh," said Grace. "I thank you," she dropped the dark lashes and added softly, "I left it—on purpose."

"Darling!" blurted Sammy then, flushed. He laughed then and told her all the things he had been thinking during the past weeks and showed her the lovely opal ring. "And that's for you—when you say the right word," he said.

Grace's eyes had already said the magic word.

Junks Fit Canals

A boat much larger than the stream in which it floats is a very common sight in certain parts of China. Junks navigate with ease those ribbon-like interior canals.

These boats whose superstructure is strikingly large, often hang over the banks of the canals through which they pass. The bottom of the craft is small enough to "fit into" the stream.

PAJAMAS OF WASHABLE CREPE

MAYBE the world at large, somewhere in the not distant past, did look askance upon pajama fashions for women. It is not doing so now. All that was before pajama costumes had been put to the test. Even the most skeptical are rapidly becoming pajama minded, for the proof of the practicality as well as the chic and the charm of the trousered ensemble has been in the wearing thereof.

Enthusiasm for pajama modes extends to every type. Whether the environment be that of bridge party reception, smart beach or in nondor or kitchen, the pajama-clad woman is sure to grace the scene. She will be present in all her glory. And it is literally "in all her glory" for the extremes to which some pajama costumes go in extravagance of material and design would credit to an Arabian night's tale.

A fascinating thing about pajama outfits as worn by women of fashion is that they have a way of declaring in their very appearance the event at which they are intended to be worn. The hostess pajama costume "says it" at bridge party in grandiloquent terms of resplendent fabric, exotic color and elaborate design. The beach pajama shouts its sportiness in whimsical and even amusing grotesque creations. Seafaring motif ens go nautical in the motifs of their pajama ensembles. And so pajamas tell their own story.

Per example, a glance at the unsophisticated yet ever so attractive-pajama costume illustrated immediately suggests the joy of home comforts. It's restful to lounge about in togs of the simplicity expressed in this model. There is a feeling of satisfaction in knowing "it will wash." That is why printed crepe such as fashion this garment has become so extremely popular for pajama making.

Quite a rivalry exists between printed crepe and shantung, the latter either printed or plain. In the realm of pajama fabrics, a clever idea is to make two coat-and-trouser sets, one of solid colored shantung and the other of printed washable crepe. By interchanging the blouse or the coat as the case may be, with the pajamas of the other, any number of pleasing combinations may be had, which will interpret the vogue for the jacket in a solid color with trousers of the gay print or vice versa, the coat of colorful patterning may top the monotone trousers, or the suits may be worn all in one color or all printed as fancy dictates.

Peppy Pimientos

THE personality in food is supplied in various ways first its appearance next its taste, then, of course, its food value, which appeals to the catory counter. When food is dull lacking in color, tastiness, is insipid, look to the little spanish pepper to give zest to your dishes.

The flavor of the pimento is not its only attraction. The color adds brilliance to an otherwise dull dish. The little pepper comes packed in several sizes, so that if one serves two, a small bottle is provided, and when it is to be the chief ingredient there is the seven ounce can. For stuffing, one may use any desired mixture. The peppers should be drained, placed in muffin pans and they are ready to be filled.

Pimientos Stuffed With Mushroom Sauce.—Cook one small onion

(chopped), one stalk of celery also chopped in two tablespoonfuls of fat until tender. Add one-half pound of round steak (ground), salt, pepper, and a dash of cayenne to season and cook five minutes, remove from the heat, add three fourths of a cupful of cooked rice, slightly beaten egg; mix well and fill the peppers. Bake until brown.

Savory Sandwiches.—Take a small can of pimientos, three and one-half ounce size, chop after draining, add one-fourth cupful of peanut butter, one-fourth cupful of sweet pickle, and one-fourth cupful of mayonnaise. Chop the pickle and mix all together, adding salt to taste. Spread on lightly buttered bread and cut into any desired form.

Pimiento Canapes.—Split the six pimientos after draining using a seven ounce can. Sprinkle the inner surface with salt and cayenne. Place a rectangular slice of cheese lengthwise of the pepper and roll up. Skewer with toothpicks securely. Roll in flour, cook in a small amount of fat three minutes or until the cheese melts and the flour browns. Serve on oval slices of toast, well buttered and hot.

WHAT WENT BEFORE

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceand, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist. Her sister, Lillian, knowing their father would object, urges her to break off the affair, but Ernestine refuses. The love-making progresses rapidly. They make a runaway marriage. Briceand is furious, but Ernestine is of age, and he can do nothing.

"No," he said. "No, I won't be angry with her. Your mother's right. The family must stand by her."

Lillian shuddered a little.

"It seems dreadful to me," she said. "Ernestine out somewhere in Chicago with that man. I don't see how she can be crazy about him in the first place, and how she could have married him in the second."

Loring reached out his hand and ran his fingers down the crepe-sleeve of her dress, caught her fingers and held them in his own.

"Would you do that much," he asked wistfully, "if you cared for a man? Would you defy everything for him?"

"I don't know," said Lillian honestly. "I don't know. I want things nice. I want some plan and arrangement to my life."

"But if the man you cared for was not—eligible," he persisted, "would you marry him anyhow?"

"It's not a fair question," protested Lillian, and then added softly: "I don't know what I would do. Because I've cared for only one man and he has been eligible in every way. So I can't imagine how I would act under other circumstances."

There was a little silence, and then he said, in a stifled voice:

"Is it Lillian?"

She looked up at him, and his face was full of suffering. Her own was compassionate.

"Did you care for Ernestine Loring?" she asked him, but he shook himself quickly.

"No, no," he exclaimed. "Not—that way. I'm fond of her. She's been like a little sister to me, all ways. But it's you I care for. It's you I want for my wife. Is it Lillian that you care for me, Lillian?"

"I always have," she answered simply, and he stared down at her and again his voice was queer and strained.

"I'm like Ernestine," he said. "What I want is love."

She put up her fair sweet face, and he kissed her placid lips.

"I love you, Loring," she assured him, and he took her roughly into his arms.

"You hurt me," she complained in a moment, and he released her and stood holding her hand gently. "I want love," he said again with poignancy, and Lillian assured him in her quick bright voice that she loved him.

CHAPTER III

Strange Country.

IT SEEMED a natural thing to Ernestine, however it seemed to the others, to waken on her marriage morning, in the little back bedroom of the tiny house where the Todds had lived all their married life. She was instantly wide awake and oriented. Perhaps it was the close tangle of Will's arms about her that made everything normal. Perhaps the delicious consciousness of new happiness had never entirely been lost in sleep. It did not matter at all about the family now.

Thinking everything, Ernestine felt in her heart something new about Will. Added to her romantic love for him was something really more wonderful; a sound thing—respect. He had behaved admirably.

She was filled with a transport of tenderness, a strong conviction of having done well. Now, at last, life had begun for her. The chrysalis of girlhood was broken, and she was emerged into womanhood. She had become real. Always now, Will would be here beside her at the beginning of every day. Gravelly she considered this, and sent up a wordless prayer that she might be a good wife.

Some one was moving about in the kitchen, and she heard the rattle of a spoon in the kitchen grate. How close and small the house was. Each sound came through the thin walls distinctly. Ernestine realized that she would have to close the window, and she essayed to rise. But at the first movement Will's arm tightened about her, though he did not waken. Ernestine extricated herself and got up with a swift, strong movement.

"You have to work today, Will," she said in such a wifely tone that he laughed and looked up at her adoringly.

"I suppose now I've got somebody even worse than my mother about making me get up," he said, and then added, "Hey, wait, I'll get you some warm water," for Ernestine was washing her face in the basin that stood on a small washstand near the door.

But the water out of the pitcher, which had stood all night with the cold wind blowing through the open window upon it, was cold and in vigorous.

Will shaved in the kitchen, and Ernestine could hear his voice, in an affectionate murmur, talking to some one. Before the small wavy mirror, she applied her make-up, looking at herself sharply. She arranged her sleek, soft hair, proud of its thickness and texture. What was there in her face? Was she different this morning? She must not be different. She powdered her face again, and rubbed some of the scarlet off her lips, which were as red as cherries under the lip salve.

She made the bed neatly and set the room in order, packed up her belongings. The smell of coffee and the sound of the percolator made her feel faint. She had eaten nothing the evening before.

In the kitchen Will's face turned on her, as bright as a triangular mirror with the sun on it. His mother was sitting by the kitchen table, with a warm shawl over her heavy dress. She could be up at times, and this morning she had made the effort. Ernestine went to Will's mother, and kissed her.

"I hope you didn't get up on our account, mother," she said gently, "but I am glad you are better."

The woman looked up at Ernestine, her faded eyes, under the drooping brows, regarding this strange bird that had slipped so easily into her nest. How old she looked, thought Ernestine. She was a generation beyond mamma, for she was old with a gentle humility and meekness that Ernestine had never met before. There was not in her even the stubbornness that sometimes the meek can use so effectively.

Will's father Ernestine could understand. A carpenter, with a gift for woodcutting, he was a skilled and able workman and had a great pride in his trade. He was a tall, thin, stooped man, with a clean shaved, heavily furrowed face and brightly saturnine, black eyes, which regarded Ernestine with a kind of grim humor. He made her realize without saying so, that he disapproved of their marriage as much as her people did, but that he was not the man to cry over spilled milk. They could count on his kindness.

At breakfast in the bright kitchen, Ernestine and Will made plans. "You are welcome to stay here as long as you like," said Peter Todd, but the two shook their heads. They had already decided to be independent at once.

"We might just as well go today, and find a place to board until we can get an apartment," said Ernestine, looking very young and earnest. "I'll get my trunk from mamma's, as soon as we have found a residence. It's awfully good of you to want us here, but the house is small, and mother is really not well enough to have us."

Mrs. Todd said nothing, and Ernestine felt that she had never seen so dispirited a creature.

"If we get near town, mom," Will said, "we can save money on carfare. I know a nice place on Erie street one of the fellows told me about, where you can get a room and two meals at a reasonable price and it's in walking distance of the office. Anyhow, I think we ought to live alone."

"That's right," said Will's father. "It's the only way for young married people. If you need any money when you go to fix up a flat, I can lend you a little. I always have a few hundred dollars tucked away for emergencies," he explained to Ernestine. "I can let Will borrow without interest, if he needs it. I own a house on Troy street, and you could have it if it wasn't leased. But the location is not good for you."

"We'll manage," said Will confidently, and Ernestine admired him. They exchanged bright looks, and Mr. Todd said heartily:

"Well, come and visit us some times, anyhow."

It was soon time for them to go. Ernestine, in her squirrel coat and scarlet hat, bade her new relatives good-by. She felt that there were tears in the air, realizing a little that these people were losing Will more definitely than she would ever be lost to her family. He was their only son, but they said good-by to him with quiet dignity. Ernestine admired their restraint, and was grateful for their good taste. They offered neither advice nor counsel, but allowed the young ones to go forth about their own affairs. The house on Erie street brought to Ernestine her first shock of reality. It was an ancient, smoke-blackened dwelling place, far from the lake. Across the street from the house a five-story machine shop reverberated with activity. A secret-looking brown-stone house, with drawn blinds, stood on the corner. Ernestine felt that the apartment they spoke of so glibly was not so near. A sense of the irrevocable nature of the step she had taken swept over her. She was now Will's, and as he had said to her father, his roof was her roof. His home was hers, and this was it. She had definitely abandoned her old ways of life and set her feet in a strange country. The future was as remote from the past as though she were following him to a great distance.

Hand in hand they ran up the stone stairs and met a small, plump woman, called Mrs. Bennett, with whom Will discussed rooms and prices, while Ernestine stood to one side, burning conscious of the gold band on her finger.

Ernestine was too good a sport to bemoan their conspicuous lack of money. Fresh from the rrors of a fine school, it was not hard for her to accustom herself to simplicity. Will discovered that she had a most practical nature. The forces which had driven her into marriage had not all been romantic. In adjusting herself to living on Will's pay, she was able to exercise some of her native ingenuity and resourcefulness, and in that capacity she found a certain pleasure. It was fun to put herself on a basis of having no money to spend and then discovering how much she had grown accustomed to spending in the months since she had left school. Her trunk was full of pretty clothes. It was an element she did not at first appreciate.

CHAPTER IV

A Party at Pastano's.

MR. POOLE was having a party for Ernestine and Will, and, according to prearrangement, Ernestine slipped downstairs ahead of time to show herself to Mrs. Bennett. She could not help but be proud of the evening dress mamma had given her for Christmas, and which she had not worn before. The yellow chiffon lay about her slender limbs delicately, subtly. She appreciated the illusive cobwebby lace that had come with the dress and the gold cloth slippers. The string of small real pearls which had come to her from her Grandmother Langley's estate, the pearl ring which daddy had given her to match her necklace, were the last touches of a perfect toilet. Will had appreciated her, this evening, his fine eyes glowing with admiration.

"You Are Lovely," He Protested as Though She Had Denied It.

"You are lovely," he protested, as though she had denied it, and she swung herself about in the narrow room and gave him a languishing mocking look. But she went down the carpeted stairs in a glow, her squirrel coat over her arm.

Mrs. Bennett got up with an admiring exclamation when Ernestine closed the door behind her. The latter advanced to the center of the room and promissed on her toes. A little, round, weary body, with three eyes beneath a fringe of gray hair, Mrs. Bennett had long outworn personal egotism and was generous with praise.

"Youth is the time to live, darling," she said to Ernestine. "My life is an old story, but you are young and glowing, and things are happening to you. It is better for you to have your hard times now, and grow old rich and strong, than to have the hardships in old age, as I have had them. But tell me, aren't you excited to be having a birthday party given in your honor by a great cartoonist?"

Ernestine laughed.

"He only wants to be nice to Will. He thinks it will please Will, and of course it does."

Mrs. Bennett maintained a discreet silence, and Ernestine turned to the mirror over a chest of drawers and looked at her reflection, running her hands over her sleek soft hair. She was a little thinner than she had been when she was married, and her eyes were big and dark in the delicate whiteness of her face. She was lovely with a breath-taking quality, her face shining with an inner spiritual excitement. It seemed to her as she stared that she looked too happy, too thrilled for every-day use. She must learn to dissemble.

"Sometimes, darling," Mrs. Bennett chided Ernestine gently, "I think you fail to realize what an effect you have on the people here—the men. You are so different from the other girls these boys know. You bloom. You wear the face of love. It's hard on them. I want you to be very wise with Mr. Poole. It would be an easy thing for you to disrupt his friendship with Will. Will admires him, and his patronage means so much, just now."

"Will won't be jealous of any attention I pay to Mr. Poole, or that he pays to me," Ernestine said differently. "If that's what you mean. It won't hurt Mr. Poole to admire me. He's a nice old man, and he loves to admire women, and men, too, as far as that goes. It's part of his big heart, Will says. Anyhow, Will won't be jealous of me—now." Her small face was so shining that Mrs. Bennett threw her advising instinct away with a gesture and came and kissed her young friend.

"Have a lovely time, darling. Pastano's has the distinction of being the very toughest place in all Chicago. It is beautiful, and not so dangerous as Mr. Pastano likes people to think. He is really very careful about the police. And then, too, you will be with Mr. Poole, who is a close friend of Italy's."

Will was at the door, grinning at them, his mobile mouth, twisted into a kind of sardonic look that he wore at times, and that made him look like his father. He had a great deal of poise, Ernestine often thought, considering his youth and scanty advantages. Marriage had changed him very little. He was, perhaps, somewhat more inflammable, but he took Ernestine and the life with her most naturally and without self-consciousness.

They went on to Pastano's, entered an unmarked doorway and climbed broad wooden steps with double doors at the top which opened upon light, music, heat and the sounds of happy voices.

The big room was airy, its excellent ventilation a surprise to Ernestine, and an important factor in every one's pleasure and good appetite. Mr. Poole came to meet them, and Ernestine gave him her hand and her nearest schoolgirl smile. She wished Mrs. Bennett had not said anything to her about this man. She did not have to heed any warnings except those her husband gave her!

Following Mr. Poole among the tables, Ernestine thought about the many things Will had told her of this man, until she felt that she knew him perfectly. His remarkable gifts, his value to his paper, his carelessness of himself, his small vanities and prejudices, his indolence and drunkenness and his great charm, she knew. He was as natural and straightforward with every one as a child with other children. Yet he possessed also the automatic manner of a man of established reputation. He drew Ernestine's hand within the curve of his arm, and led her to a table reserved for their party.

All the places were filled except theirs, and the men rose to greet Ernestine. There was only one other woman, Mrs. Weston, the wife of the syndicate editor of the Sun, a small beautiful woman with the face of a siren who can never forget her role. She had been married twice before she had met Weston, and Ernestine knew that back in New England were the wife and child Weston had set aside for her. Ernestine was conscious of the indignation common to married women against such an impostor.

Weston himself, a tall, academic man with a ribbon to his glasses, Ernestine had met at the office, and John Tucker, called Tommy by every one, who was Will's rival for honors in the art room. The third man who was presented to her Ernestine did not know and she failed to catch his name. He was a small, powerful looking individual, with a dark mustache, bright gray eyes, and a vain and elaborate manner. The other two men, Underwood and Harrison, were from the Sun staff, and happy to be at any party, any time, any place.

They all sat down, Mr. Poole with one of the women on either side, and Tommy Tucker next to Ernestine, the pompous little man next to Mrs. Weston, with the others grouped about the big table. Ernestine by now had forgotten her self-consciousness and became radiantly happy. She wished Will were beside her. She was only a half, and Will was the other half, and he ought always be beside her, breathing as she breathed, turning as she turned. The idea delighted her, and she laughed at herself, but felt still a deep joy in their unity.

Mr. Poole turned to Ernestine and told her softly that her youth and beauty were sweeter than sweet night itself. He took his glass in his hand.

"And more intoxicating," he said, "than this for which I have wasted half my life and most of my talents."

Ernestine, looking up in his kind face, knew instantly that in spite of his flowery words, and in spite of Mrs. Bennett's conventional fears, this great man had no predatory impulses toward her. He knew that she was deeply in love with Will. But to watch her, to speak to her to listen to her voice, gave him pleasure. It was all he would ever want of her. Her instinct in this matter proved true, during the years of Will's association with Mr. Poole.

"And what have you two young pieces of impudence been doing since I last saw you?"

"We have dined in state at mamma's," said Ernestine, smiling mischievously. "Will missed the vicariousness of it entirely. Papa has under duress, forgiven him. He offered Will a job in his office."

"And what does Will say?"

"He didn't even pay any attention to it. He just said that he was satisfied with the job he had, thanks just the same, and went on talking to mamma."

Mr. Poole laughed with delight. "Does he know what papa wants?"

"I don't know whether he does or not. But anyhow, papa knows now that he has decided to forgive Will. Will doesn't intend to let it make any difference. Papa really would like to let us struggle along. He feels pretty disappointed in me. But mamma can't hear it. She is determined to take care of us, whether we will or no."

"But how can she, if Will does not change his employment?" Ernestine's face grew firm. "She can't. I won't let her. I've made up my mind to have nothing but what Will gives me. I don't mind being poor."

"You must resist poverty," Mr. Poole said. "It is the deadly enemy of marriage."

Ernestine's small face was scornful. Poverty was not so black as it was painted, she observed. He looked at her.

Italy Unable to Check Movement From Villages

Italy's efforts to check the flow of population to the cities apparently have not been successful. This is especially true in the Alpine districts. The rapid depopulation there in recent years has been causing anxiety to the Italian government, which two years ago authorized the expenditure of $100,000 upon the construction of highways, the sanitation of mountain areas and other improvements. Afforestation laws, designed to create new opportunities for woodmen in the Alps areas, were also passed. The attractions of the cities of the plains have continued, however, to prove too strong for many of the old mountaineering stock, and the fall in the population of Alpine towns and villages has not been appreciably checked. Some villages have lost from half to two-thirds of their population in less than half a century.

Wax-Work Show Mystery

Among the wax figures at Mme. Tussaud's in London, there are many of prominent politicians of today, and in one of these an old-fashioned hatpin was discovered embedded up to the head. It was removed, but next day two others were discovered in the same position. At one time, when those who practiced "black magic" wished to destroy anyone, they made a wax figure in his likeness and stuck pins into it. This was supposed to have the effect of making the person fall ill, and unless something happened to break the spell, the illness would have a fatal termination.

New Use for "Cops"

New Bern (N. C.) police have added a new duty to their routine. A hurry-up call sent three policemen to a home on the outskirts of the city. They found an irate father who informed them they were summoned to make his stubborn son take a dose of medicine. The boy took it.

Clock Made Trouble
Munich held its breath as the most perfect pianissimo was softly weaving through the hall at a concert by the New York symphony orchestra under Toscanini's baton, when suddenly a loud, purring sound set in, and continued most insistently—until one of the musicians jammed his instrument against his side with fury. He had bought one of those small pocket alarm clocks which belong in the pocket of every real tourist who has seen Europe. He had forgotten all about it until the little clock did its duty, purring conscientiously, but at the wrong moment.

Patient Work on Quilt
Mrs. Arnold Stevens, an invalid, of Brockton, Mass., has completed work on a quilt made of 20,736 pieces, each cut the size of a postage stamp. There are scarcely two squares alike in the entire coverlet, which was made entirely by hand. Mrs. Arnold used 100 spools of thread in the quilt. She set herself this task a few years ago, and has worked at it intermittently. In addition to this and other sewing she has made in this time ten other quilts of slightly larger pieces.

how he is regarded by others

From the San Jose Mercury Herald—

Editor Mercury Herald: I have known C. C. Spalding for the past 15 years, and during all this time I have been intimately acquainted with him. He has lived in this community over 30 years. I have never heard one person raise the question of his honesty.

Charlie has been a wonderful citizen, always the first to help any one in need. Always the first to boost any public improvement that would better the community, and has always had a smile and a warm grip for rich and poor alike.

There are only a few men born with the facility to really like people regardless of their faults—Charlie is one of them. Charlie has had broad and diversified experience. Not only does he know the need of the agriculturist from his own experience as a rancher, but he also knows the need of the business man from his own experience as a business man.

His 12 years in the state legislature has been valuable experience. I believe it would be hard to find a man as well fitted as C. C. Spalding for the office of supervisor of the Fifth district.

If Charlie is elected the Fifth district will receive its full share of the funds of the county, and I am certain he will co-operate and receive the full co-operation of the other supervisors in the development of the county as a whole.

WE THE PEOPLE

GOVERNMENT exists for OUR mutual welfare and protection. When it ceases to do that equitably, it must be changed. Our representatives who do not keep this fact always before them fail to represent us and must be supplanted.

A survey of just one field—TAXATION—shows how badly we need new representation in the Twentieth Assembly District.

We may not all share alike in the benefits of government. That is our responsibility, for the opportunities are equal. But, if we have more than our share of the burden of taxes thrust upon us, and we who own land and improvements do, we are helpless. IF WE FAIL TO PAY OUR TAXES, NO MATTER HOW UNJUST, WE LOSE OUR PROPERTY!

Federal income tax returns disclose that income producing resources in California produce three times the income earned by land and improvements, yet LAND AND IMPROVEMENTS BEAR 70 PER CENT OF THE TAXES! How do you who own land and improvements feel about the unfairness of that situation?

We need an assemblyman who will fight vigorously to rectify tax inequalities, one who is "economy minded," and who views government from the needs and the tax-paying ability of the average small-property owner and wage earner.

If this is the type of assemblyman you want in the Twentieth District, if you want a leader in humanitarian movements, one who has been active in civic life where he saw good to be accomplished, then I seek your support and vote on August 26.

Dirigible R-100 Makes a Safe Flight, Britain to Montreal, Canada.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GREAT BRITAIN'S big dirigible, the R-100, made a successful and uneventful crossing of the Atlantic ocean, taking off from Cardington, Wales, and reaching Montreal about 76 hours later. There, at St. Hubert airport, she was tied up to the mooring mast that had been built for the purpose, and her passengers landed, well pleased with the trip.

Until the airship reached the vicinity of Newfoundland she maintained a speed of between 50 and 70 knots, but the ever-present fogs then forced a slowing down until she got well into the Gulf of Lawrence, having passed over the Belle Isle straits. While passing over Quebec the airship sustained some damage to the fabric covering one of the fins, and the motors were shut off until repairs had been made. This delayed the arrival at Montreal somewhat and prevented the tying up of the ship to the mooring mast until early Friday morning. Throughout the voyage radio communication was kept up with bases in England and Canada and with ocean liners. The north-east route was taken, following the great circle by way of north to a point south of Cape Farewell, Greenland, then to Belle Isle and along the St. Lawrence river to Montreal.

Squadron Leader R. S. Booth was in command, with four officers and a civilian crew of 39 men. Among the few passengers were Lieut. Com. Charles Dennistoun Burney, managing director of the firm that built the R-100; Lieut. Com. R. St. John Prentice of the British aircraft carrier Courageous, and Maj. G. H. Scott, famous British airship commander.

R-100 is the largest dirigible in the world, and will be until the two which are being built at Akron, Ohio, for the United States, are completed. It is 700 feet long and 123 feet wide, has a cruising radius of 4,000 to 6,000 miles.

CANADA'S parliamentary elections were watched with great interest because the results are likely to be important to the United States as well as to the Dominion. The Liberal government, headed by Mackenzie King, was decisively defeated by the Conservatives, and Richard B. Bennett, Conservative chief, will be the new premier. Mr. King himself was re-elected to parliament, but many members of his cabinet lost out, these including Finance Minister Charles A. Tannan, who drew up the budget increasing tariffs against the United States and lowering them to Great Britain, which constituted the main issue of the campaign.

A quick call to a session of the Canadian parliament is considered one certain result of the political upset.

Canada's extension of tariff preferences to Great Britain, without exacting tariff preferences in return, can be expected to be withdrawn or modified as the result of the election. The electors turned it down in defeating the government candidates. Canada, in other words, will make its trade treaties with the world, irrespective of empires and sentiment.

The St. Lawrence seaway plan is once more thrown in the realm of political controversy and uncertainty. Higher tariffs against the United States, in the absence of a Canadian-American trade agreement, are to be expected under a Bennett premiership.

STARTLING news came from China. A large Communist army took possession of Changsha, capital of Hunan province. The government troops retiring without making any defense, and the city of half a million inhabitants, a commercial, political and educational metropolis, was looted and partly destroyed by the Reds. Ten government buildings were burned, as were numerous foreign properties and the offices of the Standard and Texas Oil companies were robbed.

Wealthy residents who were unable to escape were tortured to death. The Red invaders proclaimed a Soviet republic.

The burning and looting, says a dispatch from Shanghai, was carried on in a systematic manner. The city was divided into 50 wards, each administered by a Communist leader with a group of riflemen. All power was centered in a supreme Soviet committee. Gangs of Communists headed by squads of Red troops, surrounded buildings marked off by the supreme command for depredation.

Orators proclaimed the Communist purpose "to distribute the surplus wealth," and selected followers entered the buildings and transported furniture and valuables to the street, where they were auctioned off.

The proceeds were pocketed, after which the coolies and town riffraff were invited to enter and complete the looting. After this the places were burned and the crowd moved on to the next building scheduled for destruction.

More than 200 foreigners, 20 of them Americans, were at the summer resort at Kuling, near Kiukiang, and were considered to be in grave danger. On Wednesday the American gunboat Palos, which was approaching Changsha, was fired upon by Communists and five of her crew wounded. The Palos returned the fire, using machine guns and three-inch rifles at close range, and finally dispersed the Reds. The Palos had previously helped evacuate foreigners from Changsha and was returning to survey the ruins of the city. Two American missionaries, Rev. William Lingle of Salisbury, N. C., and Rev. Allen Cameron of Lawrence, Kan., remained in Changsha because they had conscientious objections against accepting protection from gunboats.

WITH virtually no opposition the London naval treaty was passed by both houses of the British parliament and then was made effective so far as Great Britain is concerned by receiving the formal approval of King George under a procedure instituted during the reign of Henry VIII.

Senator Henry Johnson of California, leader of the opposition to the treaty in the United States, declared that the alacrity with which parliament ratified the pact was proof that the British were only too eager to seal a bargain perpetuating their control of the seas.

UNDER the guidance of Prohibition Director Amos W. W. Woodcock, dry enforcement is to be carried out in a manner that will not be so likely to arouse the rage of the citizenry. Mr. Woodcock proposes to have the dry law agents trained "to act always as gentlemen" and to resort to the use of firearms only in self-defense. He called the administrators and special agents all in to Washington and laid before them a statement of his policies which was said to have been approved by President Hoover and Attorney General Mitchell. Schools will be set up to teach the agents "to use their brains rather than their brawn in discharging their duties," to train them in methods of gathering evidence, in knowledge of the law and in habits of discipline.

Five major points were emphasized in the Woodcock statement aside from the proposal to maintain high personal standards for agents. These were: (1) Establishment of a system of daily reports to Washington by deputy administrators; (2) scientific research into such problems as drunkenness statistics, alcoholism deaths and hop and corn sugar production; (3) efforts to obtain more state aid in dry law enforcement; (4) efforts to secure more uniform sentences for violators; and (5) concentration upon the commercial liquor traffic rather than upon "pitiful, pleanlyish, non-commercial cases."

Supervisors of industrial alcohol permits also met in Washington and, with their chief, James M. Moran, considered how they might best combine their efforts with those of the prohibition enforcement unit.

President Hoover's law enforcement commission will issue a second formal report of its work this fall. Arrangements for formulation of the document will be completed at a meeting here early in October.

Leaders of nearly all the dry organizations in the country issued a signed declaration of policy which was looked upon by many as a recognition of the growing antagonism to prohibition enforcement as it has been carried on in the past. In it they repudiate all enforcement policies that do not regard and safeguard every personal right guaranteed by the Constitution, and pledge themselves to a campaign of education. The declaration states it is the paramount purpose of the Eighteenth amendment to destroy traffic in intoxicating beverages, and that the enemies of prohibition try to make this appear as offensive sumptuary legislation.

OUT of the welter of Democratic aspirants for the gubernatorial nomination in Texas, "Ma" Ferguson, former governor, and Ross S. Sterling, wealthy Houston publisher, emerged in the lead, and the victor will be determined in a run-off primary, since neither of them had a majority. State Senator Love, who led the successful bid in Texas from Al Smith in 1928, was among those badly beaten. United States Senator Morris Shepard was renominated.

There will have to be a run-off election in Oklahoma also. The leaders in the Democratic race for governor were "Alfalfa Bill" Murray and Frank Buttram; and for United States senator, Thomas P. Gore, the blind former senator, and Charles J. Wrightsman.

IN LINE with the Hoover program helping business, representatives of the various branches of the building industry and allied agencies of finance met in Chicago and created a permanent national conference on construction. Julius H. Barnes, chairman of the national building survey conference last fall, presided, and was made head of a committee to complete arrangements for the organization of the conference. A statement issued said:

"The meeting was held for the purpose of reviewing the principal inter-group problems of the construction industry and to determine the practicability of developing a continuing organization to assist in the solution of such problems. 'Aspects of reality finance, including problems of legislation, appraisals of property, methods of home financing and credit practices were discussed. Possible means of securing greater stabilization of the construction industry, a number of aspects of taxation and practical methods of introducing economies in the building and financing of residences and income properties, were considered.'"

PRESIDENT HOOVER has created a commission to study the question of unemployment statistics and has invited labor, business and economic groups to select its members. Ethelbert Stewart, commissioner of labor statistics of the Department of Labor; William M. Stewart, director of the bureau of census for the Department of Commerce, and a representative of the Department of Agriculture will be ex-officio members.

In announcing the appointment of this commission the President defended his practice of naming such investigating bodies, and added: "As we need the best brains of the country to assist in government and in the co-ordination of public efforts I shall appoint others."

RUSSIAN goods will not be kept out of this country merely because they come from a Soviet state. This in a sentence was the stand taken by President Hoover, and consequently Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Lowman had to reconsider his decision denying the entry of two shipments of Russian wool pulp at New York imported by the Amtorg Trading Corporation. Any action barring Soviet goods the President held must be based solely on the law applicable to all nations and designed to exclude convict-made goods and prevent "dumping" practices on the part of countries competing in American trade.

IF THE Wafdists or nationalists of Egypt succeed in their campaign against King Fuad, Abbas Hilmi, former khedive who was deposed by the British, may be restored to the throne. The British government is said to be disposed to accept this result, though both Italy and France have declared their opposition. The Wafdists assert that as long as Fuad is on the throne there will be no peace in Egypt and no possibility of settling disputes with Great Britain.

POULTRY

IMPROVED HOUSES MEET MUCH FAVOR

Not Necessary to Build Expensive Building for Hens.

There is nothing that will have a greater influence on the poultryman's success or failure than the way in which he houses his birds, declares O. C. Ufford, extension poultryman for the Colorado Agricultural college.

The shed-type poultry house built deep is the safest and most satisfactory for Colorado conditions because it is economical, warm, dry and comfortable when properly built, Mr. Ufford says in a recent well illustrated bulletin, "An Improved Poultry House for Colorado Flocks," copies of which may be obtained by writing to the college.

It is not necessary to build an expensive laying house, the bulletin states. The cost need not exceed $2 per hen when the best materials are used, and it is possible to put up a satisfactory building in some localities at a much lower cost.

Poultry houses should be constructed to make use of the abundance of sunshine, especially during the winter months when it is most needed. A concrete floor built at least six inches above the highest point of ground nearby to eliminate moisture is recommended.

The shed-type of laying house is the most comfortable and economical when built 20, 22 or 24 feet deep, with not over a 9-foot front wall and a rear wall 5½ feet high it is stated. Windows along the back under the dropping boards furnish light on the floor.

Openings 3½ to 4 feet square placed across the front of the house will provide ample sunshine.

Muslin is warm and cheap and is preferred over glass in the front of laying houses, the bulletin states. Numerous details of construction are explained and illustrated for the benefit of men and women interested in improved poultry houses.

Dependable Source of Income in Choice Hens

During the past few years every section of the country has suffered from the sudden and severe decline in the price level of most farm products. For this reason it is rather significant that in the Middle West where the agricultural depression has been the most acute, poultry and egg prices have remained firm. This, more than any other factor, has caused farmers to realize that a standard bred, high producing flock of chickens properly handled, is a dependable source of income and that poultry keeping compares favorably with any other farm activity.

Danger in Green Corn

Feeding green corn to chickens may cause trouble and the farmer will do well to proceed with caution in introducing green corn in the ration. To overdo, the green corn may set up digestive disorders, and diarrhea always results in a setback. This does not mean that new corn should not be used. It will be advisable to start in gradually and increase the amount fed as long as the hens appear to be free from digestive disorders.

POULTRY FACTS

Exposure to cold, damp or drafts, aids materially in bringing on roup among the chickens.

Marketing all the best turkeys is poor business from the standpoint of next year's crop.

Cracked grain and skim milk make a profitable ration for growing chicks, say poultry experts.

Artificial hatching is practiced almost exclusively where turkey raising is engaged in on a large scale.

All mature poultry should be confined to a limited area and not allowed to range with the young stock.

Scaly leg is caused by a mite getting under the scales of the chicken's legs. This sets up an irritation and causes the scab.

A chicken sent to the Kentucky experiment station for post-mortem was found to have 2,511 internal parasites. No wonder the chicken died.

Don't wash eggs. Keep them from becoming dirty by having plenty of nests, keeping the hen house clean and gathering the eggs often.

Drugs are useless in the control of coccidiosis among chickens. At the first symptoms of the disease the birds should be placed on a heavy milk diet.

The late maturing turkeys that would not dress out as number ones at Thanksgiving because of lack of size, may be confined and fed heavily on corn for the coming holidays.

Dead chicks pay no bills. Use of clean practices means more live chicks and better profits. Sanitation will save one more chick in five than will live under dirty conditions.

It is not best to hurry the pullets into heavy production. Allow them to come into production normally without feeding highly stimulating feed. Fewer "blowouts" will occur when production is not forced at the start.

A Look into the Future

Suppose a crystal gazer, gifted with the power to lay the future before our eyes, parts the curtains and gives us a glimpse into the future—

Before our eyes unfolds a picture of CONTINUED and INCREASING prosperity for our America—already the most prosperous nation in the world!

An increase of millions of population in the United States.

Transportation systems developed to such a degree that distant rural sections become easily accessible suburbs.

Industry, decentralized from the few congested areas, following the present trend toward the smaller community, closer to raw material, lower overhead, ideal labor conditions.

A healthier, happier race, working shorter hours, taking full value of play hours, yet producing MORE in the shorter working time because of increased efficiency of labor and machinery.

. . . But enough of the general—the picture changes, and in its place we see the future of OUR OWN COMMUNITY!

Opportunities have been grasped, possibilities realized. Each sees the result of having done his part. WE HAVE BECOME THE ONE OUTSTANDING TOWN IN TEN WITH EVEN A GREATER GOAL BEFORE US!

We have MADE people like us; trade with us; live with us. Not just through HAPPENSTANCE, but because we have made OUR town a better place in which to live than other towns; better schools; better churches; better health conditions; better working conditions; we have made OUR town more beautiful, and have given it a more pleasant personality!

We have made it a BETTER BUSINESS TOWN because we have made people like to come to do business with us. And we have grasped our opportunities as they have been presented to us, and have made our town a good place to earn a living in by bringing industry to it, and by expanding our trade radius.

Through our schools, churches, clubs and business organizations, we have perfected our present policy of making those living outside our corporate limits FEEL THEY ARE A PART OF OUR TOWN, by joining with us in our every community activity.

Property values increased—business better—population doubled.

Community detriments removed; community possibilities improved!

Health, wealth, prosperity for all, because we all did our part!

And from the inspiration of this fleeting glimpse into our future we turn to TODAY and DO our part in the fulfillment of this future for our community!

The past, the present, and the future! We have reviewed the past of our community with respect and reverence for the pioneers of this community; we have safeguarded the present with a sincere study and survey of community conditions and problems; NOW LET US SAFEGUARD OUR FUTURE by DOING our part of making OUR community THE ONE IN TEN
